FURIOUS BOMBARDMENT IN PROGRESS.

Chinese Batteries Responding Well.
ANOTHER HUGE FIRE STARTED.

Shanghai, (7.42 a.m.), To-day.

The heavens rocked with thunderous explosions and thousands of Shanghai residents were rudely awakened, when at 5 o'clock this morning the Japanese artillery opened out against a block of building situated to the North of the recently destroyed Commercial Press. The accuracy of the Japanese gunners, who shelled the buildings, owing to the belief that large numbers of Chinese troops were concentrated there, was reflected when a huge conflagration broke out, sending columns of smoke and flame up into the sky.

SOVIET-JAPANESE CONVERSATIONS.

Karakhan and Hirota Meet.

C.E.R. AND MANCHURIA.

Moscow, Yesterday.

M. Karakhan to-day received Mr. Hirota for the purpose of putting a verbal questionnaire dealing first with the request of the Japanese Commander at Harbin to the C.E.R. to supply seventeen trains to convey troops to Imenpo and the further station of Pogranichnaya, ostensibly to protect Japanese lives.

M. Karakhan declared that this abnormal development, which involves the moving of troops over the Soviet frontier, is beyond the jurisdiction of the management of the C.E.R.

Secondly, the same Commander, he said, had approached the C.E.R. to conclude an agreement for the transport of troops anywhere on the C.E.R. at a fifty per cent. reduction of rates.

M. Karakhan argued that such an agreement impinged on the political sphere and affected the existing Sino-Russian and Japanese-Russian agreements.

M. Karakhan also protested against the Japanese giving assistance to White Guards in Manchuria, which he said was in defiance of the assurance given to M. Litvinoff by Mr. Hirota.

The Soviet further required information concerning the character of the new State in Manchuria.

Mr. Hirota promised to get the information immediately from Tokyo.—Reuter.

JAPANESE REPLY TO LEAGUE'S APPEAL.

Under Consideration.

Geneva, Yesterday.

Members of the League Council, excepting the Chinese and Japanese Members, are exchanging views in regard to Japan's reply to the Council's recent appeal, but no meeting of the Council has yet been fixed.—Reuter.

HEAVY ARTILLERY BOMBARDMENT

EXCHANGE OF ARTILLERY FIRE ON THE KIANGWAN FRONT

NO SERIOUS FIGHTING

CHINA HOLDS JAPAN RESPONSIBLE FOR THE BOMBING OF HANGCHOW.

An artillery duel of great intensity started early this morning in Shanghai and was going on with unabated fury at 8 o'clock. The Chinese batteries are responding splendidly.

Another huge fire, as the result of this bombardment, has been started in Chapei in a block of buildings near the destroyed Commercial Press.

As a result of protests, in future, Japanese reinforcements for Shanghai will not be landed within Settlement limits. The Japanese Flagship is also to berth elsewhere.

The artillery bombardment, mentioned above, ceased soon after 8 o'clock. Fire is being exchanged on the Kiangwan front, but no serious fighting has occurred.

Japanese reinforcements are believed to be hearing Shanghai, but none have yet landed.

China is protesting to Japan concerning the bombing, yesterday, of Hangchow, and says she will hold Japan liable for damage done, as Japan has not yet declared war and this is decidedly an act of war.

(Reuter's Pacific Service).

Shanghai (10.16 a.m.), To-day.

At eight o'clock this morning, the firing in Chapei subsided and quiet is yet being maintained.

It appears the Japanese were using to-day 12 field guns, firing simultaneously and concentrating on one position, where it was believed Chinese troops were assembling. The 12 guns fired 25 rounds apiece.

This morning there is an exchange of artillery fire on the Kiangwan front, but so far no serious fighting in this sector has occurred.

Japanese officials are reticent regarding the arrival of reinforcements, but it is believed transports are nearing Shanghai.

No reinforcements, however, have yet been landed.

CHINA PROTESTS TO JAPAN

BOMBING OF HANGCHOW.

(Reuter's Pacific Service.)

Nanking, February 27.

The Chinese Government is protesting to Japan of yesterday's bombing "without warning and without provocation of the peaceful city of Hangchow," pointing out that Japan has not yet declared war on China and holding the Japanese Government liable for compensation for the damage caused.

NIGHT BOMBING AIR RAID.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Shanghai, (10.31 a.m.)

To-day.

For the last two night, Shanghai-layers have been mystified by sound waves of the reports of artillery pieces, though the artillery batteries in and about Shanghai were apparently silent.

The mystery has now been cleared up. Japanese airmen, taking advantage of the bright starry night, have been conducting a series of night bombing raids.

Japanese officials have now been ordered not to fly over Settlement limits, unless absolutely necessary.

STIMSON'S LETTER

HOW WILL BRITAIN REACT?

U.S. AND LEAGUE

FEARS TO TAKE A HAND.

Washington, Yesterday.

The State Department is watching with interest the preparations for the League Assembly meeting on March 3.

Though the United States is not participating officially, Washington will have an observer present.

Curiosity has been aroused as to how Britain will react to Mr. Stimson's hint to Senator Borah that Japan's violation of the Nine-Power Treaty might cause revision of United States' naval policy in the Pacific implying a new race of naval construction. Though the State Department is eager that the

The anti-cyclone has strengthened and is now central over the Lower Yangtze Valley.

The depression is central to the S.E. of Hokkaido. Forecast:—N.E. winds, fresh; overcast; rainy.

League should declare decisively against Japan's activities and is anxious to co-operate in such a decision. It fears that, a direct invitation to participate in the League's discussions and assume responsibility for the decisions taken at Geneva, might arouse the enemies of American participation in the League which they denounce as a gang dominated by European political card-sharps eager to get Uncle Sam to help to police the world principally for the benefit of France and Britain. Such sentiments are strong in Congress, and any clash over the principle of United States' participation in the League would ham-string Washington's efforts to check Japan.—Reuter's American Service.

The Races. LAST DAY OF ANNUAL MEETING

GOOD RACING IF WEATHER IMPROVES.

(By Wombat.)

Inclement weather conditions are sure to detract from the pleasures of the concluding meeting of the annual racing season this afternoon at Happy Valley.

There are very fine entries and, if the weather improves, some bright racing may ring down the curtain on one of the best meetings that has ever been conducted by the local racing committee.

Racing Boy looks the biggest certainty of the afternoon in the principal race on the programme, and if this pony succeeds in winning his event it will be a first-class performance, as he has already won four events in the subscription class. The chances of Bistre and Cy-pres are not to be denied however, and if, Racing Boy does not happen to strike the form, which has enabled him to pile up such a successful number of victories, then one of these ponies will assuredly carry off the honours.

The Australian Champions for horses is the next event of importance and a great race will be seen here as some of the latest importations are very fast, and, as the best of these will be in opposition, race-goers are in for a perfect treat when these classy looking animals are saddled up for their events.

Four handicap races for "A" and "B" Class ponies have been included on the card and they appear to be very open races. My selections are:—

THE BREWER CASE.

Mr. Noel Instone Brewer, barrister-at-law, has now been granted a free pardon by the Government of Hong Kong and has been paid £1,000 as ex gratia payment. Mr. Brewer is at present at Home, and Mrs. Brewer, who is now in the Colony, intends to proceed home to join her husband, sailing from here on the S.S. Rajputana on March 28.

LAUGHTER IN COURT.

When 13 Chinese were yesterday afternoon charged at the Kowloon Magistrate's Court with gambling at 366, Nathan Road, laughter was caused by a Chinese detective who said that at the time of the raid he told the inmates that he was seeking Eugene Chan and on that pretext gained admittance. He stated that he gave that name because it was the first that came into his head. The case was adjourned.

FOUR POWERS REPRESENTATION.

Fresh Notes to Japan.

U.S. CO-OPERATION.

Washington, Yesterday. Britain's initiation of Four Powers' representation in Tokyo is interpreted here as evidence that Britain definitely agrees with United States' policy in the Far East.

Sir John Simon has requested American participation in submitting fresh notes in Tokyo, and Mr. Stimson has instructed the American Ambassador there to join the others in this action.

Sir John Simon and Mr. Stimson have been frequently communicating of late about conditions in the Far East. Sir Ronald Lindsay is now visiting the State Department almost daily.

Britain's failure definitely to make a statement on her Far Eastern policy, in the same way as the United States did on January 7 and again on February 24, has caused comment in some circles and raised suggestions that Britain is lukewarm in her defence of the Nine-Power and other treaties affected, but friends of Britain are of the opinion that Britain's position, as a member of the League, is wholly different to that of the United States.—Reuter's American Service.

JAPAN'S GROWING APPETITE.

Japanese-Soviet Diplomatic Tension.

Moscow, Yesterday.

Rumblings of Japanese-Soviet diplomatic irritation provokes the "Investia" to remark that the "Japanese appetite is growing after their experiment with Manchuria and Shanghai. They want now to try their luck in Soviet waters."

This is the conclusion the Paper arrives at in an indignant article attacking the reported resolution of the Executive of the Seikai that Japan favours a modification of fishery rights in northern waters and Rouble exchange.

The newspaper asserts that Japanese fisheries are growing annually and that Japanese trade in actual Soviet waters amounts to fifty-eight as compared with the Soviet's forty-two per cent.

Controverting the need for interference with Rouble exchange the "Investia" cites the case of what happened to the stocks of the Kamchatka Stock Company since Japanese departure from the Gold Standard, and concludes with these words: "These gentlemen should curtail their appetites."—Reuter.

JAPANESE REINFORCEMENT.

Not to Land in the Settlement.

Rugby, Yesterday.

It is considered unlikely that Japanese reinforcements for Shanghai will be landed in the International Settlement. The British Ambassador at Tokyo has requested that the landing should be made elsewhere in the interests of the safety of Foreigners resident within the Settlement and has also suggested that, as a precautionary measure, the berth of the Japanese Flagship anchored off-bound which recently drew Chinese Artillery fire be moved further down the river thereby lessening the risk to life and property in the Settlement.

Other powers with interests in the Settlement are reported as having made similar requests at Tokyo.

WATCH YOUR HIP.

It seems to me that all skirts, sports styles and those designed for every-day wear, must be carefully fitted at the hips, which is, after all, the whole secret of the success of many new attires. Simplicity, we are told, is the keynote of these new skirts, and slimmness is the way designers interpret this demand for "simplicity."

Waists come at a normal or slightly elongated line, and interesting changes in colour may be brought about by buttons on a diagonal hip line.

Gored styles in "sponge-bag" checks fit slim, and have but little fullness at the hem. Brightly coloured hopsack skirts with seams making broad panels front and back, open about six inches from the hem revealing three or four closely-set knife pleats.

KEEPING GLASS BRIGHT.

A good way of keeping glass always bright and clear is to add a teaspoonful of ammonia to the water in which it is washed. Place a towel in the bottom of the basin to prevent "chipping," if a wooden bowl is not available, and slip the glass in sideways. Always rinse glassware in cold water, dry with a linen towel, and polish with a leather.

YOUR LAUNDRY.

It is most important to have all bed and personal linen thoroughly aired when returned from the laundry before it is used. Damp bed-clothes or the putting on of damp garments may lead to serious chills.

As you open each thing out inspect it for thin places or tears. These are much better dealt with before the articles are put away and then there is no delay when they are wanted for use. It is a good plan to make airing day mending day too, and then you know that whatever is put away is in perfect order without further trouble.

Replace buttons on garments from which they were removed before they were sent to the laundry—pearl buttons that might so easily cut the material if they get broken should, of course, always be removed. See also that other fastenings are quite secure and that there are no tapes missing from pillow and bolster slips or from garments that require them. Darn all socks and stockings too.

A sewing machine will darn and patch bed and table linen much quicker than you can do the work by hand. When there are thin places stitch across them with the machine backwards and forwards in all directions always working a little beyond the actual worn part on every side. This makes a strong and lasting repair. Patches look very much neater when machine-stitched on and are done in a twinkling.

Bath towels often wear thin in the middle while the ends are quite good. Cut the worn part away, hem the raw edges and you will have two very useful hand towels for the bathroom or the kitchen.

FOR INVALIDS—AND OTHERS.

The invalid, or one who appreciates breakfast in bed, should be introduced to the wide range of silver-plated stands which will hold three, and sometimes more, oddments at once.

There is a small stand with egg cup in the centre, and on either side the pepper-pot and salt cellar. Another stand has two small dishes suspended one over the other, a toast rack being opposed to the marmalade pot. Or another construction to carry the egg cup has a butter dish and toast rack, all under one handle.

These handles are of a size one can grasp conveniently in lifting the food from the bedside table.

SHORTER SKIRTS.

One delightful feature of the new skirts for outdoors at home is their shortness. Already an inch or so has been taken from tweed and suiting costume skirts, and they are tighter too.

The fashionable demoiselle is loud in her praises of this tidy, trim line, but let us pray that we shall be

BRUSHING AWAY STAINS.

Of the various methods of cleaning clothes which are only slightly stained or marked, a useful suggestion is the brush whose bristles are moistened with a preparation contained in a small well at the top. This is quite simple to manipulate because the brush is moistened automatically, and the spirit used is non-inflammable.

Apropos of stains, in most labour-

TAKE CARE OF YOUR SHOES.

Every well-dressed woman knows the value of smart footwear. It is not enough to buy good shoes. Care must be taken to keep them in perfect condition. No woman who takes a pride in her appearance would dream of putting her shoes away after wearing without first slipping the trees into them, because she knows unless this is done the shape will be absolutely ruined. If she is ultra-careful she will have them cleaned, or at least dusted, before they are put away.

Shoes that have been worn on a wet day need a little extra care. To dry them near a fire is a great mistake as this hardens and shrinks the leather. The best way is to stuff them well with paper to keep the shape and leave them resting on their sides, preferably in a draught, until dry. This gives the soles a chance to dry more quickly. If the leather seems stiff when dry, rub a little cream, or for dark shoes, olive oil or vaseline, well into it and wipe off with a soft cloth before cleaning in the usual way.

The Pinched Toe.

Never wear shoes that pinch as their shape is sure to be spoiled by having to walk in an unnatural manner. After putting on the shoes hold a cloth wrung out of boiling water over the part that pinches. This will stretch the leather and make it take the shape of the foot. It is generally quite effective, but if not, take the shoes back to the shop at which they were bought and let them do the necessary adjusting.

Most people have their own preference in shoe cleaners, but a very good emergency substitute for most leathers in a little cream or milk applied with a soft rag and polished off. Lizard skin shoes are best cleaned with peroxide of hydrogen used on a sponge.

VEIL VOGUES.

Veils are no longer worn by the well-dressed merely to give allure to bright eyes, or introduce a beauty spot, the latest veils are flesh-coloured and amusingly embroidered.

I must mention that such veils are quite short, a couple of inches from a dropping brim sufficing.

It is the embroidery which has taken such an interesting turn.

There are strange green insects along the edges. A black spider is a fashionable pet. Other beasts are worked in scarlet, violet, and orange threads. In fact, dress artists are allowed to be as imaginative as they please when it comes to decorating the new veils.

CONSIDER SLEEVES.

Of all the new and attractive sleeves which have been presented to those seeking 'original' fashions, the prettiest I have seen were on a semi-evening frock.

At least the style of frock was not strictly evening, it would do for any except the most formal occasions, and would be just right at a fashionable afternoon function.

The sleeves were wide but hardly reaching the elbow, and consisted of hundreds of petals in six tiers. Dull green crepe ribbon was used for the petals and the ankle-length frock was cut from satin of the same hue.

The owner also carried a bag, reminiscent of a full-blown flower, crepe ribbon petals being fitted to a small gilt frame.

MODISH, AND PRETTY TOO.

Not at all grotesque, but expressing great beauty of line, was the lovely hat in a Mayfair modiste's. Black antelope had been used, but models, alas, do not come under the heading of economy.

As to the peculiar charm of this new shape, the material was quite smooth, and the edges in three tiers all arranged to fall in wavy lines, going up away from the forehead one side and down the other.

In completion, a tiny veil hardly reaching eye level was fixed across the front, tapering to nothing at the back. Thus served as a convenient hair-net. Three quills, two white, one black, were twisted in a diagonal line across the tipped-up side.

RUMJAHN OVERCOMES HIS HURDLE.

Tsui's Impetuousity Proves His Downfall.

FINCHER PASSES ON.

The match which commanded most attention in yesterday's Tennis Championships programme was that between S. A. Rumjahn and Tsui Yui-pul. Possessing a beautiful forehand drive when he desired to control it, Tsui astounded the many spectators by walking away with the first two games. After this, however, he became careless and with the exception of one or two brilliant moments he was steadily overcome by the steadiness of Rumjahn. He is yet young and should become a player of high merit in two years' time for he possesses all the strokes. His one big fault is his over-impulsiveness and to this he can well attribute yesterday's defeat.

Rumjahn, on the other hand, won on his opponent's mistakes rather than on his own display. He seemed nervous at the commencement, but later steadied down to play a careful game. One noticeable fault was his weakness in service, which should cause some anxious moments to his many followers during the course of the Championship.

E. C. Fincher, favourite for this year's title, found no difficulty in entering the third round in straight sets.

The first day of the Open Doubles provided very mediocre tennis and lacked inspiration.

WELSH NATIONAL GROUND.

Union Considering Two Sites.

RUGBY FOOTBALL.

London, January 27.

The urgent need of a national Rugby ground, which would be the recognised headquarters of the game in Wales, has been widely discussed. Especially has this been the case in Cardiff and Swansea, the two places which would be most directly affected by any change.

In conversations with members of the Welsh Union I find that they are fully aware of the heavy losses they have suffered through the non-provision of adequate accommodation. This was driven home very forcibly by their experience in the England v. Wales game at Swansea, and it is a fact of some significance that the official figures showing the attendance at that match have not been published.

Ever since the leading clubs in South Wales acquired their present status, and long before that, there has been the keenest rivalry, bordering at times on bitterness, between East and West, writes forward in the Daily Telegraph. That is the ruling body's greatest difficulty in coming to a final decision as to whether the venue shall be Cardiff or Swansea, and the only satisfactory way I can see out of the difficulty is to convene a special meeting of representatives of all the clubs affiliated to the Union, and to let them make a choice, by a majority vote, between Cardiff and Swansea.

Delicate Task.

Personally I had no doubt as to what would be the result of such a meeting—regrettable as it might be to take any step which would alienate Swansea and Llanelli, would be made.

THE CAMERA AND THE GOLFER.

Professional's View of a New Theory.

AND A WARNING.

It has been said that there is no new thing under the sun; this wise assertion is supported by Stanley Haynes, professional to the Maidenhead Golf Club, in his reply to my first article on the Camerarian School of Golf. He says that when I said the camera had flouted long-accepted golf theories, I was only repeating what has always been recognised by those whose business it is to make a study of the game.

I should suggest that every golfer has a right to make it his business to study the game so as to enjoy the playing of it, without any vaulting ambition to be a Bobby Jones.

The Maidenhead professional admits that the movement of the hands before the club in starting the backward swing, was "first exposed by the camera." That is a very candid confession—and a reflection!

In his long letter, my professional critic warns the public that there is a danger of this movement being "grossly exaggerated," writes Clyde Foster in the Evening Standard.

Haynes refers to the danger of a "painful dragging away of the hands" which encourages the right elbow to stray from the side—a fatal error—with an additional swaying of the body, causing an "appalling slice" or an "absolute fizzle."

But these statements need not frighten the Camerarians, although I am indebted to the professional for a very useful criticism, and he has my assurance that his "word of warning is not out of place."

The professional criticises the camera, which is rather on a par with tilting at the Quixotic windmill. He says:

"In my humble opinion the weakness of the camera as a medium of instruction lies in its exaggeration of detail. . . . That the camera has taught us certain things about our golf cannot be denied, but it is just this exaggeration of detail which is so misleading to the beginner."

I am not sceptical of the Camera's testimony. It shows everything in proportion, and is trustworthy. But here is my point:

Take no thought of more than is necessary and persevere with the Camerarian doctrine of "hands before the club at the start of the swing."

I concur with the concluding statement of the Maidenhead professional when he says:

"The controlling factor in golf is the hands and if the novice would realise this and not bother his head so much with the details of the swing he would go on much quicker."

These words might have been reproduced from my original article. They exactly convey what I said of the teaching of the Camera—the headmaster of the Camerarian School of Golf—who has "taught us certain things," as admitted by Stanley Haynes.

The two principal West Wales clubs. Realising the delicacy and importance of any action they may take in the matter, the Union members have exercised the greatest patience and care for a number of years, but they now feel that the time has come for something definite to be done. There are two sites under consideration, and one of them, in particular, is eminently suitable for the laying out of a magnificent ground with ample space in which to provide accommodation for 100,000 people.

It would be indiscreet on my part to mention the location of that ground, and I leave it until negotiations for the acquisition of the site have reached a stage at which it can be made public without danger of "queering the pitch."

At Neath on Saturday the Big Five did not take many minutes to pick the team to play against Scotland at Murrayfield on Saturday week. It was almost a foregone conclusion that not a single change

A WHOLE WEEK'S NEWSPAPERS IN ONE.

In Admiralty Jurisdiction on February 19, the Chief Justice gave judgment against the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, on claim and counter-claim, involving over $80,000, arising out of a collision in Hong Kong harbour in March, 1931, between the Japanese s.s. Toyooka Maru and the China Navigation Company's steamer Kiangsu. His Lordship said he had no hesitation in saying that the main cause, at least, of the collision was the action of the Toyooka Maru in going across the fairway into fog. He had also come to the conclusion that the Japanese ship could have avoided a collision by dropping her anchor. A full text of the finding is published in the OVERLAND CHINA MAIL.

The Annual Race Meeting opened at Happy Valley on February 20, in brilliant weather. Times were fast and the turf was in perfect condition. However, it rained on the fourth day, but that did not in any way dampen the enthusiasm of racegoers. The Ladies' Purse was won by Mr. Y. S. Chang, his mount being King's Bounty, the favourite for the event. Several record times were broken, Doctor's Mandate doing exceptionally well in that line, lowering a record on the second day, and then beating his own record the following day! Dividends were fairly high, the biggest being $651, for second place, and $434 for third place. Liberty Bay (Mr. Hill up) won the Derby in a common canter. The lucky winner of the Derby first prize, $12,000 odd, was a Chinese man. A full report of the meeting is chronicled in the OVERLAND CHINA MAIL.

The China-Japan war is still raging, in spite of what the Powers are endeavouring to do to restore peace. Reports of a big Chinese victory over the Japanese were current in Hong Kong on February 23, and soon every Chinese citizen was celebrating the good news. Crackers were fired all over the place, and the streets were littered with red paper. Latest movements of troops in the war zone, and the grave situation in Shanghai are dealt with fully in the OVERLAND CHINA MAIL.

There is no phase of the life of the Colony or of China that does not receive attention in the OVERLAND CHINA MAIL—the weekly paper that YOU MUST ORDER NOW.

MALCOLM CAMPBELL AGAIN TRIUMPHS.

Establishes Three Other Records.

FAILS IN THE MILE.

Daytona, Yesterday.
On the Daytona Beach track Sir Malcolm Campbell failed in his further attempt on the land speed record, averaging 251.748 m.p.h.
Daytona, Later.
Although he failed in the mile, Sir Malcolm Campbell established three other records, averaging 242.761 m.p.h. over the Five Miles; 247.941 m.p.h. over the Five Kilometres; and 238.669 m.p.h. over the Ten Kilometres.—Reuter.

"ZIMMY" ENTERTAINS PRESS MEN.

A Swim in the Harbour.

"NICE AND WARM WATER."

In spite of the cold snap, "Zimmy," the World's Champion Legless Swimmer, undertook, yesterday afternoon, to give a diving exhibition to Press men at the Victoria Recreation Club. On arrival at the club, however, it was found that there was no water in the bath, which was under repair. This did not deter "Zimmy" who very sportingly entered the harbour at the Dockyard end of the V.R.C.'s boat-house slipway, and gave an interesting exhibition of swimming. He reported that the water was nice and warm, and what he regarded as really cold was 45 in fresh water in Japan, in January! "Zimmy" exhibited several kinds of strokes. The sea was choppy at the time with an outgoing tide, and swimming against it, "Zimmy" made good headway, showing that he is a strong swimmer.

Ordinance No. 39 of 1931 (Tobacco)

It is notified by direction of His Excellency the Governor and pursuant to sub-section (1) of section 16 of the Tobacco Ordinance, 1931, that the Harbour of Victoria has been appointed a port for the importation and exportation of tobacco.

CHINA STATION NOTES.

H.M.S. Devonshire, which is now on the way to the China Station from Malta, to relieve H.M.S. Berwick, is expected to arrive in Hong Kong harbour on March 15.

H.M.S. Berwick, which is going home for refitting and recommissioning, sails from Hong Kong on March 9. In the meantime, the destroyers Wild Swan and Verity are now in Shanghai acting for H.M.S. Berwick, in case it becomes necessary to evacuate British nationals from the Northern Settlement.

Whether or not H.M.S. Devonshire will proceed to Shanghai, following her arrival here, will depend on conditions then prevailing up North.

The destroyer Whitehall is now doing duty at Swatow, while H.M.S. Cumberland is still exercising out at Tolo Harbour. All the remaining ships of the China Squadron, with the exception of cruisers in Shanghai, are at present in port.

H.M.S. Verity is due here from Home on April 11 with reliefs for H.M.S. Tamar, H.M.S. Medway and submarines, while H.M.S. Canterbury, with reliefs for gunboats on the Yangtze, is due here on May 3.

WERE THE BABES LITTLE ROTTERS?

"B.P." Pantomime Query.

"From what I know of the Babes in the Wood, they went into the woods evidently imitating Boy Scouts; but they hadn't learned Scout sense enough to track their own footprints out of the wood again, nor had they learned how to light a smoke-fire to signal to their friends; they could not even cover themselves with leaves, but must needs get miserable little robins to do the job for them!"

"Little rosters, I call them! But that's what boys and girls are likely to be if they don't join the Scouts or Guides. To be sure, however, perhaps the play will show these Babes in a better light and that we shall find they are not such rotten little robins as I say. These, composed by Lord Rodes, Powell appears in the programme of 'The Babes in the Wood' which

"TOL'ABLE DAVID."

Modern women are generally very independent, working alongside the men in most business and social capacities, earning their own livings, buying their own clothes, and supporting themselves in many instances, even after marriage. That this is not true of the mountain women who dwell on stoney little farms in the valleys between the towering mountains of West Virginia, is seen in "Tol'able David," the film, adapted by Columbia Pictures from Joseph Hergesheimer's famous story, and now showing at the Central Theatre.

In this picture, when heart failure takes away the head of the house, and an accident incapacitates the eldest son, no one is left to work the barren fields and so eke out even that poor existence which the family had previously enjoyed. The family must move into town to a poor shack, giving up the farm on which it has lived all its life.

For women folk of the mountains to work the farm themselves, is out of the question. Cooking, caring for the house, feeding hungry mouths, milking the cows, feeding the little livestock they possess—this is their work. Beyond this, to till the fields also, would be more than their strength would allow. They are dependent on their men to do the work which brings them food, just as those gaffler Americans, the Indians, were dependent upon their warriors to go out and bring down the deer, wild fowl and other food.

"Tol'able David" boasts an excellent cast. Richard Cromwell, a newcomer to the screen, is "David" Supporting him are many well-known stage and screen troupers, including Joan Peers, Henry B. Walthall, Helen Ware, Noah Beery and George Duryea. John B. Blystone directed.

"GUILTY HANDS."

Lionel Barrymore is featured as the master killer in "Guilty Hands," Bayard Veiller's new mystery drama which will show from tomorrow at the Queen's Theatre as a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer offering.

In this startling murder thriller, Barrymore contributes, the best performance he has given upon the screen. His characterisation of the veteran prosecutor and attorney, facing the necessity of killing a man himself, rises to dramatic heights not yet attained by him, including even his personal triumph in "A Free Soul."

W. S. Van Dyke directed the mystery picture with splendid judgment and adroit use of unusual camera angle and sound effects to strengthen the bafflement and mystery of the original piece penned expertly by Veiller. This is the most striking story of its kind to come to the talking screen.

Kay Francis and Madge Evans head the splendid supporting cast, Miss Francis playing the part of Barrymore's feminine nemesis, and Miss Evans acting the part of his daughter, paired with William Bakewell in romantic interest. Included in the cast are C. Aubrey Smith, Polly Moran and Alan Mowbray.

"LADIES OF THE BIG HOUSE."

A number of interesting anecdotes regarding Sylvia Sydney's early stage and screen experiences were told at the Hollywood Paramount studio, when she and Gene Raymond were on the sets making "Ladies of the Big House," a romantic story of two young lovers, cruelly separated by the law just before their wedding day, which is the feature picture at the King's Theatre to-day.

"Miss Sydney's first stage role," said an old friend, "called for a good old-fashioned, blood-curdling scream as the curtain came down at the end of the second act. The audience was so terrified by it that Miss Sydney became a specialist in stage screams as a certain cue in a succession of plays. It took her some time to live down her reputation as the 'terror actress'."

Gene Raymond said he witnessed the following trying situation: "Miss Sydney was playing a scene once in which she picked up a waste basket full of revolvers and carried it from a room under the nose of the police."

Raymond continued: "I was suddenly aware of a change in Miss Sydney's acting. She became more intense; the audience became more alert. There was a crash on the stage. The audience was deathly still; there was not a snicker in the house. Miss Sydney continued her vibrant but collected performance; but the bottom had fallen out of the basket and the police had to pretend not to see the revolvers. By her capable acting Miss Sydney held the attention of the audience and saved the scene."

"CANARIES SOMETIMES SING."

"Tom Walls will soon be as well-known to film fans as he is as an actor-manager," says the "Yorkshire Evening News." "In turning to talking picture production, he has the advantage of having at his command a succession of bright farces with dialogue and situations worked out with clockwork precision."

"Canaries Sometimes Sing," which will be shown at the King's Theatre on Sunday, is just as welcome as, and no less amusing than, "Rookery Nook" and "On Approval." Though restricted in its setting, there is no restriction in the amount of laughs it creates. Tom Walls, in the dual capacity of director and leading player, has given us the polished article, and, at the same time, grand entertainment fare.

A Trade Barometer.

There being no "financial wizards" in the Colony that we know of, it must be left to the imagination to guess how many (or, how few) people in high places interested in finance and commerce will take the trouble to analyse the official figures of the trade of the Colony furnished by the Statistical branch of the Imports and Exports Department. The latest returns are those for January, 1932, as compared with January, 1931. Those returns disclose what was only to be expected in regard to the Colony's trade with Japan—a decrease of over $3,800,000 in imports and a decrease of just over $1,000,000 in exports. What we are—or should be—concerned with, as a British Colony, is our progress or otherwise with the British Empire as a whole. Ruling out, therefore, the Japanese losses on both sides of the ledger last month as compared with the corresponding month of last year, our trade experts have to account for a decline this year of $1,637,185 in the value of imports and for a decline of $8,616,864 in the value of exports. To these losses the British Empire is responsible for no less than $1,104,371 in imports to this Colony and for $1,500,050 in exports from Hong Kong.

A glance at the commercial map of the Empire reveals few bright spots—evidence, it may be argued, of the persistent effects of the general depression throughout the world. The Colony's imports from the United Kingdom last month fell by over $12,000,000 compared with January, 1931, whilst our exports dropped by over $48,000. Our next best British ally, the Straits Settlements, showed a decline of over $8,200,000 in imports here and a decline of over $550,000 in goods shipped from Hong Kong. Here, again, our commercial nerves may be soothed not only by a reminder of the world's depression, but of the particularly strong slump in rubber and tin in British Malaya that has, in turn, reacted in most pronounced terms on the inward and outward trade of the Straits Settlements. An increase of nearly $495,000 in imports from India was offset by a reduction of $580,000 (roughly) in our exports—the latter, no doubt, being due to political more than commercial conditions in India. From Canada, we took $280,000 more goods last month than in January a year ago, but what we shipped to her dropped $34,000. Much the same ratio applies in respect of Australia; but a brighter outlook is disclosed in the case of Egypt from which we shipped $41,506 more and sent back $226,937 more than in the first month of 1931. South Africa supplied us with merchandise to the greater value of $62,000; but the measure of our reciprocity was a decline of $56,546 in the value of goods shipped from Hong Kong. Our trade with British North Borneo declined on both sides of the ledger, as did that with Burma; but we were a better customer for East Africa by over $35,800, our exports showing an increase of only $4,000. As regards the rather vague term, "British Empire, Other Parts," we took nearly $250,000 less and sent $32,000 less in the comparative months under review.

Reviewing the Colony's trade with the British Empire as a whole, the position cannot really be regarded as really bad compared with what other nations, East and West, are passing through. And then no comparisons relating to a single month can be deemed satisfying of itself. The handwriting may be on the wall, but there is not nearly sufficient of it to guide our commercial mentors. We may as a British Colony devoutly hope that future months will disclose a betterment in our trade relations with the Empire of which we are a unit; but we cannot by the mere waving of a fairy wand create all the conditions favourable to such a desirable consummation.

Nature Study.

One of the many happy features of modern education is the attention being paid to, and lively interest being taken in, Natural History and Natural Science. Youth is being catered for in these directions as youth has not been catered for in the past. Many books have been written to interest the young mind in the history and the science of Nature Study, and there are periodicals designed to keep alive that interest and quicken it. As boys and girls emerge from the chrysalis stage of youth into manhood, it would be a pity indeed if nothing was provided to keep alive their quickened interest in Natural Science and History. Fortunately, such provision is made, in the form of more and yet more advanced publications dealing with the subject. No young man or woman, whose interest in Nature Study has been quickened in youth, can say, with any justice to-day, that interest waned and was extinguished for want of food. If, alas! such has been the case, the fault is within and not without.

Among the many periodicals designed to quicken, maintain and spur on interest in the Science of Nature Study is one upon the doorstep of every home in this Colony—"The Hong Kong Naturalist." It is a periodical which ought not to be allowed to remain on the doorstep. It ought to be taken within and read and studied. A little familiarity with this fundamentally educational, and withal highly interesting, journal will soon dispel the fear from the layman's mind that it is "highbrow" and beyond the comprehension of the man-in-the-street.

"The Hong Kong Naturalist" is serving the Colony well and truly. It is filling, what is usually described as, a long-felt want, though you will not realise that until you have made a point of reading it. And the sooner you make up your mind to do so, the greater the pleasure there is in store for you.

Now, "The Hong Kong Naturalist" costs money to produce. It depends entirely upon subscriptions and advertising revenue to meet its production costs. The Hong Kong Government made a grant in 1931, and is making another grant this year, towards the cost of coloured plates, but the grants permit of only a few coloured plates being used, for such plates cost a deal of money. Without them, however, much of the value of the journal would be lost.

Then, those responsible for the publication, which is edited by Dr. G. A. C. Herklots of the University, desire to extend the scope and enhance the value of the journal. But, unless they receive the encouraging support of the people of Hong Kong, their efforts are doomed to be severely restricted. The people of Hong Kong can render valuable service by becoming subscribers to the journal. The annual subscription is $7.00, a trifle over 50 cents a month. It is worthwhile. And we urge you to lose no time in becoming a subscriber to a journal you will learn to appreciate and like.

In the coming year, it is hoped to commence a series of illustrated articles on the Flowering Shrubs of the Colony. These articles will be written as simply as possible and will be fully illustrated with photographs and line drawings. Another innovation will be the inclusion of outline maps showing the Territories or portions of the Territories with localities clearly marked from which collections have been made. There will also be included from time to time photographs depicting characteristic scenes of mountain, village and agricultural life. It is hoped that anybody who possesses good negatives of scenes in the New Territories will be willing to put them at the journal's disposal.

A journal of this nature lives not alone by the number of its subscribers (though this is an important consideration), but mainly by the useful service it renders, and the interest and enthusiasm of Naturalists, be they amateur or professional. As we have already said, "The Hong Kong Naturalist" is serving a useful purpose in this Colony, and it will be a matter for the greatest regret if the people of Hong Kong, through apathy, permit it to languish. Hong Kong must take pride in "The Hong Kong Naturalist," and see to it that by all the means of encouragement in its power (we have indicated a means already) that this journal will go on from good to better and best, and take its place in the ranks of similar journals in the world. It is up to the people of Hong Kong. What is their reply to be?

ST. STEPHEN'S COLLEGE, STANLEY.

A double event was enacted at St. Stephen's College, Stanley, yesterday, when at the annual prize distribution, Mrs. W. T. Southern led the tree planting ceremony.

His Lordship, the Bishop of Victoria presided, and was supported by the Hon. Mr. S. W. T'so, the Hon. Mr. T. T. Chau, the Warden (Rev. E. W. L. Martin), the Hon. Mr. Foo Ping-sheung and members of the College Council and Staff.

Dr. Yiu. Man-awong presented the prizes. After the speeches those present adjourned outside, where the inauguration of the tree planting took place, followed by tea.

ERIN'S NIGHT IN HONG KONG.

Ball at the Peninsula Hotel on "Paddy's Day"

SOCIETY'S PROGRAMME.

The Committee of St. Patrick's Society of Hong Kong are busy perfecting their arrangements for their forthcoming Ball, to be held in the Peninsula Hotel on March 17. Guest-lists have been sent out to Members of the Society, and, by the response, it looks as if the popularity of the 1931 Ball will be surpassed this year.

His Excellency The Governor and Lady Peel have again graciously consented to attend the Ball.

Attendance to be limited.

Dancing will commence at 9.30 p.m., and will continue to 2 a.m. next morning. It has been decided to limit the attendance to 700 to avoid overcrowding with its attendant inconvenience to dancers. To avoid disappointment Members, who have not done so, are advised to send in their guest-lists without further delay. Invitations are now being issued.

Innovation. This year the Committee, with a desire to remove much of the tedious formality connected with such functions, are trying the experiment of eliminating speeches. Another innovation, which is considered will conduce to the general enjoyment by making the atmosphere somewhat that of a large family party, will be the provision of a running buffet from 11.30 p.m. to 1.00 a.m. Gentlemen will, surely, appreciate the privilege of attending to the wants of their fair partners, and will see that they are well supplied from the many appetising items which will be provided.

During the time the buffet will be open, dancing will continue in the ball-rooms, an orchestra will also be provided in the dining-room to entertain the guests with selections of Irish music.

Irish Dances. It is proposed to include two Irish dances in the programme, one in each half. In order that those interested may have the opportunity to practice, dances are being arranged in the Helena May Institute, the first will take place on March 4 at 5.15 p.m.

It is hoped to have a large attendance at these practices, and the co-operation of all Members is asked in order to make them a success.

News in Brief.

Lowest open air temperature yesterday was 50. Humidity at 10 a.m. was 61, and at 4 p.m. 66.

Among those who also sent floral tributes to the funeral of Rev. St. Enrica Adamoli (Cassian Institute) were Mr. and Mrs. John Waan.

It is notified that at the expiration of three months from February 25 the Our Store, Limited, will, unless cause is shown to the contrary, be struck off the register and the company will be dissolved.

Dr. G. A. C. Herklots gave an interesting radio talk on "Beautiful Hong Kong" last night, broadcast from Z.B.W. He gave full credit to the Hong Kong Horticultural Society for the part it had played in the great transformation of this barren rock into the wooded and flowered slopes of the Peak and the undulating hills stretching down to East Point, which, when Britain took over the island, was almost devoid of any vegetation or plant life.

MILLINGTON, LTD.
(SHANGHAI).

[To the Editor of "China Mail."] Sir,—Having been informed that a rumour is being circulated in Hong Kong, evidently by interested parties, that Millington Limited in Shanghai is bankrupt, I wish, through the medium of your valuable paper, to explain that there is no excuse for anyone circulating such an absurd rumour as the following note was appended to a notice which appeared in the North China Daily News which referred to the winding up by voluntary liquidation of Millington Limited 1930, when the new firm was organised with greatly increased capital:—

Note.—This notice refers to the old company and in no way affects the new Company of Millington, Ltd. carrying on business at 113-115 Avenue Edward VII, Shanghai.

CORONER'S FINDING.

"Death by misadventure" was the verdict returned at the enquiry into the death of Fung Sam and Ng Tim, two stone breakers, who died at the Kowloon Hospital as the result of blasting operations on the Tai Po Road on January 24. Mr. J. S. MacLaren, at the District Office South, sat as Coroner, without a jury.

Ten Years Ago.

[From the "China Mail" of February 27, 1922.]

To-day's dollar is worth 2/4 13/16. Five West Point tobacco godowns owned by the Leung Yik firm have been completely destroyed together with their contents as a result of a fire which broke out there early this morning and was still burning at noon. Thanks to the strenuous efforts of the Fire Brigade there is now no danger of the fire spreading. The total loss is estimated at $300,000, of which $200,000 is covered by insurance.

By Rupert Croft-Cooke.

A GREAT MAN WHOSE IGNORANCE WAS GREATEST BLISS. And Vulgarly Sublime.

I have only known one "great man." Great, that is, not in achievement but in presence, consciousness, in gesture, and in personality. Perhaps he was the last of that age—the age of Tennyson and Gladstone—when great men were great figures too.

His name was Bullen, and he was the founder and principal of a private school which has long since passed into lesser hands. I call him Bullen, for before it the "Mr." sounds fussy and bourgeois. To us he was Bullen, not familiarly, but with the stark dignity of any single name. One calls him Bullen as one speaks of Einstein, Mussolini, or Hannibal.

He was, when I remember him, well into his seventies, not tall, but stoutish and immaculately dressed. He had strong white hair, carefully brushed with a high whisk in front, a white moustache twisted arrogantly high at the ends, a healthy, uniformly red complexion—that brick-coloured flesh of a finely preserved old man—and small eyes, fiercely yet humorously blue. There was nothing school-masterly about him; he had never worn a gown and would have been impatient of its folds.

He had a deep and yet voluble disdain for academic culture, and a fine quality of—in the truest sense of the word—vulgarity. If he was, as some asserted—and I will not myself admit it—both ignorant and vulgar, then his ignorance was the greatest bliss and his vulgarity nothing less than sublime. Indeed, no one could apply those adjectives to him without tarring himself with the same brush. I feel that as I write now, I feel that it is an outrage to call him either. Yet my cold reason tells me that he was not an intellectual or even a cultured man.

Compare him with a man of letters, a scholar, an aristocrat, and each in his way, and on paper, would seem superior to our Bullen. But put them beside him, let each try to convince you of something, measure the force and the depth of their convictions, and it is he who rises vociferously above them. Distinguished visitors came in plenty to that college—professors, politicians, a bishop or so, and once a leading actor. And I never saw any man who was not insignificant beside him. That is why using words like uncultured about him may possibly be true, but seems alike and smirking and cheap.

His oratory was most characteristic of the man. It flowed like a large and powerful river, carrying everything with it. There was no dam that it could not break. It might start inauspiciously enough with a mild correction to a small boy running across the quadrangle. "Me boy"—he always addressed one as "me boy,"—"you shouldn't run about in that wild fashion. It's not gentlemanly to go tearing about the place as though it were a bear garden. And there's another boy, y'see, with his ha-and in his pockets. Me boy! Take your hands out o' your pockets! Y'see some of you boys seem to imagine . . . By now a few more youths would have been drawn into the circle, for no one would dare pass by when Bullen was speaking. When he had perhaps ten boys round him and the tide of his oratory was flowing high, he would send boys out for the rest of the school. "Send all the boys here. I want them to listen to what I'm saying to you . . ."

Within ten minutes two hundred boys would be gathered round him in the quadrangle. No matter what was going on the school must gather. Football would be stopped, choir-practice cease, a music-lesson end, as it were, in the middle of a note, a class be broken up, and the boys hurry to cluster round Bullen while he spoke. The time for a meal might come, or the time for school bells would ring in vain, and the curriculum take its chance of continuation. So long as it pleased Bullen to address his school he addressed it.

What about? In the three years I spent under him I must have stood for at least forty solid hours listening. And I cannot say that one of those amazing speeches had a particular theme. They would start, as the one described, with the incident of a boy running, and would continue through a splendid process of associated ideas over the whole world and Bullen's own youth. His words rolled out rhythmically in a trumpet-blown rhetoric, but frequently his mind worked too quickly for his sentences and these would never be closed. "Y'de like animals, some of you. You've no respect for yourselves. I can see a boy with grease-stains down his coat . . . why, when I was a lad I should have been ashamed to have such a thing . . . I should have hidden me head in shame at the thought of having the manners of some of you young hooligans, with no more sense of how to behave and how to conduct yourselves properly, or even how to eat . . . why" (you note the promised figure of comparison forgotten in the excitement of a new idea) "why I was watching some of you at table to-day—and it was barbarous . . ."

You can have no conception of Bullen's oratory unless you can hear that word as it rings in my ears now—"BARBAROUS," with a terrific thrust of the jaw and a disgusted sweep of the hand as it came out. And that force animated all his long tirades. Department was, as I suppose, the most recurring topic. He wanted his boys to carry themselves as he did. His own manner was superb. His shoulders were always square and solid, his bulk so erect that his stoutness was unnoticeable. His hands were resolutely chafed behind his back. And that was how he wanted us to move, or as nearly as possible. To this day I feel sometimes guilty if I slope down a street with my hands in my pockets. "Stand up, me boy"—I can hear it—"don't walk like a farm labourer . . ." Such was often the burden of his speeches, or at least their opening.

At any time of our school lives these speeches might be opened on . . . We were never quite secure from them. For instance, Bullen used to read the lessons in Chapel. He would step out from his pew on a Sunday, straight and immaculate late in a morning-coat, white waistcoat, and button-hole, his white hair in place, more vigorous than patriarchal. He would advance to the lectern and commence to read, but if in the New Testament he came to dialogue he would, as it were, take the parts of the histrionic in him which could not resist this. "And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, 'Stand forth!'" A small motion of Bullen's hand would indicate the command, which would be delivered in a voice different from the narrative one. "And then he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, 'Stretch forth thy hand!'" The obvious gesture from Bullen, "and he stretched it out." And so on. It was pantomime to a degree. Did we laugh? Did the graduates of Oxford sitting at the ends of our pews laugh? If they did so in the common-room afterwards, I am convinced that their laughter sounded sneaking, petty, and intensely stupid.

But he went farther. As he read a boy might repeatedly cough. Bullen would look up from his Bible. "Me boy, will you please suppress that coughing? Y'see, some of you boys . . ." There would follow a long harangue which might last twenty minutes while masters, boys, distinguished visiting preacher, sat and listened.

His staff was as afraid of him as his pupils. He would go into their class-rooms and tell them to stand down while he explained how it should be done. And therein, perhaps, lay the weakness of his "College." But even that he overbore by his own titanic strength of personality.

He was lonely, I think, as all great men are lonely, but not because he was not loved. He was too conscious of his own greatness to indulge in familiarity. I do not mean that he was conceited, for that is utterly irrelevant. It does not matter what he thought of himself—I doubt indeed if he ever for five minutes in his life became introspective. He was above thinking about himself. He stood erect and autocratic over the world he had shaped about him.

That is what we, his pupils, of a later generation must envy him. From boyhood he knew what he wanted; he set out for it and achieved it. He had absolute and secure faith in God, in himself, and in the worth-whileness of his aims. In us that quality is dead and tolerance has taken its place—tolerance and what we call a sense of humour. He transcended proportion.—Manchester Guardian.

KOWLOON RESIDENTS' ASSOCIATION.

Criticism of Government's tardiness in carrying out necessary public work in Kowloon, and the inadequacy of the Post Office were stressed at the annual general meeting of the Kowloon Residents Association, held in the St. Andrew's Church Hall last evening.

The Rev. W. Walton Rogers was elected President in succession to Mr. F. C. Mow Fung, and Sir Henry Pollock, K.C. and Mr. B. Wyle were elected Life Members of the Association.

In the course of his review, the Chairman said that three important problems—the control of traffic at the Star Ferry approach, the Children's playground and the bus service had been satisfactorily rectified, but disappointment would be felt that there was not a more definite and substantial response to representations regarding the inadequacy of the Kowloon Hospital, the growing need of a new Post Office building, the more effective policing of Kowloon Tong, and the provision of fire-protection for rural districts. There was no doubt, he also said, that the establishment of a public dispensary in the Tsim Sha Tsui district similar to those in other important centres of the Peninsula, was highly desirable.

In seconding the report, Mr. E. Cock, M.B.E., referred to the smoke and dust nuisance, and suggested that the experiment of sprinkling the streets and washing the gutters with sea water, might well be tried during the dry months.

CLYDE SHIPPING

1931 THE WORST YEAR KNOWN.

The worst year since the industry was properly established is the record of Clyde shipbuilding during 1931.

Marine engineering suffered a corresponding slump. In shipbuilding, the decline represented a 70 per cent. fall from 1930, and an 80 per cent. slump compared with 1913, when the industry reached its peak point of productivity.

During the year output consisted of 101 vessels aggregating 152,666 tons, as compared with 249 vessels, representing 529,586 tons, in 1930, and 377 vessels, totalling 766,490 tons, in 1913, the record year. Marine engineering slumped to approximately the same extent, the figures being 186,937 i.h.p. in 1931 and 644,874 i.h.p. in 1930.

In 1923, when the shipbuilding output was 175,528 tons, and in 1886, when the aggregate gross tonnage totalled 172,440, the slump was reckoned as severe, but never at any time has the outlook been so bad as at present.

Only two out of the 21 producing yards could be said to be reasonably supplied with orders, these being Messrs. Lithgows, Ltd., Port-Glasgow, and Messrs. Yarrow and Co., Scotstoun. The former have almost a year's work in front of them. Within the past four months the Port-Glasgow firm received orders for eight or nine cargo carriers of from 5,000 to 7,000 tons gross, and have almost 60,000 tons gross measurement of new construction.

The total amount of work in hand on the Clyde is approximately 140,000 tons, of which the 73,000-ton new Cunarder, now in a state of suspension, represents about half. Over 200,000 tons of shipping is also laid up in the locks in the estuary of the Clyde.

NAVAL FILM - ACTING JUDGE QUESTIONS LEGALITY. Court Action by the Admiralty.

A dispute concerning payments due to the Admiralty for facilities provided for the filming of "The Flag Lieutenant" led
Mr. Justice Charles, in the King's Bench Division, to make comments on the use of the Navy for film making.

The Admiralty sued Astra National Productions, Ltd., of Wardour Street, W.C., claiming £1,607 as an additional share due to them of the proceeds of the film under an agreement made with the company in June, 1926.

Mr. S. O. Henn Collins, for the Admiralty, said the company secured the consent of the Admiralty to take photographs of the ships and personnel of the Navy for the film, and the Admiralty were to be paid a share of the receipts from the sale and rental of the film. "The Flag Lieutenant" was produced, and a dispute had arisen on certain items of payment arising out of the agreement.

Mrs. Justice Charles.—Is it anticipated when the Navy vote is passed that the personnel of our Navy will be used for making a film?
Mr. Henn Collins.—No doubt anything made out of it comes into the account and is appropriated in aid.

For the Sports Account.
Mr. Russell Vick (for the defendants).—I believe the whole of it goes not to improving the personnel as actors but as sportsmen, because it goes into the sports account.

Mr. Henn Collins.—It is a very good advertisement of the Navy,
if the Navy can be said to require advertisement.

Under the agreement, said Mr.
Henn Collins, the Admiralty were to have 15 per cent. of the balance of the receipts for the film, after deducting the actual cost of the production, distribution and exploitation of the film.
The defendants got another incorporation of themselves, National Productions, Ltd., to make the film and now sought to charge against the Admiralty in the accounts as actual cost of production, distribution and exploitation the money expended by National Productions, and the amount paid to that company
by the defendants for making the film—45 per cent. of the gross takings.

If, counsel contended, the agreement meant what defendants suggested it was obvious that they could so arrange their finances that in no event could the Admiralty get anything at all.

Is It Lawful?

Mr. Justice Charles.—That comes of the Admiralty embarking on things of this sort.
You will have to satisfy me that this is a lawful agreement. It is not for me to say as a judge

whether this is desirable or not.
The only question is whether it is lawful—whether the Admiralty have the power to use the ships and personnel of the Navy for the purposes of making such a contract.

Mr. Henn Collins.—The Admiralty can use the ships and personnel so far as the courts are concerned how they please.
And complaint to be made is made in Parliament.

Mr. Justice Charles.—The Admiralty enter into this only so far as it lawfully may do. Is not that for the Court to interpret unless they have some special Act or Order in Council enabling them to do it? I am not at all satisfied that they can do this lawfully at all. If that agreement is unlawful I cannot implement it however satisfactory it may have been to one side or the other.

THE BILLY BOYS' WORKSHOP

A Simple Book Stand.

This neat book stand can be made with any kind of wood three-eighths of an inch thick, but of course it would look best in oak, satin-walnut, or mahogany. It measures thirteen inches by eight and a quarter inches, and will hold about eighteen books.

A simple book-stand which you can make if you read "The Hut Carpenter's" instructions.

For the sides you will require two pieces of wood thirteen inches long and five inches wide. Plane these nicely on both sides, and on one mark out the cut-away portions A. Saw these away, finish the curved parts with a chisel, and smooth the edges with glass-paper. Use this side as a pattern for marking out the ends of the other side. Finish these in the same way.

The bottom of the stand is thirteen inches long and seven and a half inches wide. Carefully saw and plane it to size, using your try square to make sure that the edges are quite square.

Fix the sides to the bottom by screws, spaced as indicated in the second diagram. Deeply countersink the screw holes, and plug them after the screws are driven in, as shown in diagram B.

Cut out the centre partition to the sizes given in diagram C, and slightly round the top corners. This part, which must fit nicely between the sides, can be fixed in position by three screws at each side. Countersink the holes as before, and plug them after the screws are in. Another screw can be driven through the middle of the bottom part into the partition.

When the screw-hole fillings are thoroughly dry, take a sharp chisel and remove any projecting pieces so that the sides are quite smooth.

Now obtain three feet of three-eighths-inch fancy half-round beading, and from this cut two pieces thirteen inches long. Glue these pieces along the sides of the stand, as shown in the top diagram, and then glue on the upright pieces, cut to the proper length. This beading hides the screw holes and provides an ornamental finish.

Finally, glue wooden buttons underneath the corners, as shown at D, to form feet.

LONG AGO STORIES.

Willow Bud And The Water Spirit.

Willow Bud was twelve years old, and very lovely. She had two plaits of long black hair, and eyes as black as night. When the Red Indians went on the war-path, she stayed with the squaws, salting fish, and making pinole which was ground and dried maize. When they were making pinole Willow Bud was always sent down to the rapids to throw some to the water spirit.

Sometimes Willow Bud would stand on the river bank looking at the rocks over which the water dashed rapidly, but she never saw the water spirit. He was a serpent, she believed, a dreadful creature,

"Willow Bud clung to the rock, and there they left her."

yet very necessary to them. He breathed water up into the sky where it became clouds, and later it fell back to earth as rain. But often he was angry, and then he dried up the river, or sent famine, or caused great braves to be killed in battle.

"Why are you sometimes unkind to us?" asked Willow Bud, when she threw pinole to the water spirit. "Every fisherman gives you his first fish, I bring you the best pinole, and we all acknowledge that you are great and we could not live without you."

The serpent was too proud to answer, but that summer it was very angry, and gradually dried up the river, only allowing a little water to remain near the rapids where it lived coiled up under a rock. The Indians were distressed, and they looked at Willow Bud, and whispered.

"Willow Bud, I will plait your hair with blossoms," said an old squaw one day.

Willow Bud was pleased. When the Chief brought her a little coat of mink fur, and told her she was the most beautiful of maidens, she was delighted.

BAD LUCK—GOOD LUCK.

Once upon a time, two poor maidens set out to look for Luck, but they had no idea where he might be.

"I shall help all poor old men and women across roads," said Alvira. "They may be Luck in disguise."

"I shall keep my eyes wide open and let nothing escape me," sighed Miranda.

They were so poor that they were obliged to beg their bread, and when people told them that it was better to do a little work than to look for that rogue Luck, they turned up their pretty noses and went on.

Luck was very amused. He was a wild youth, who dashed about the world in all sorts of disguises, and he decided to play a trick on Alvira and Miranda as he did on a number of other people.

"I will put myself right in their way and they won't know me," he laughed.

Now it happened that Alvira and Miranda were at the seaside, and Alvira took a boat and went out to sea.

"I shall have a rest," she thought. "Luck is not likely to be all by himself on the sea, so I can go to sleep."

But when a great brave sent her a pair of beaded shoes, her heart began to beat very rapidly.

"Am I to be a bride?" whispered Willow Bud. And the old squaw nodded, though she would not tell Willow Bud who was the bridegroom.

That evening Willow Bud was led to the rapids, and then she knew that she was to be sacrificed to the water serpent.

"Oh Water, Water, I cannot be your bride!" she cried. "Spare me, and send us back the river!"

But they pushed her into the rapids, where she clung to the rock, and there they left her, knowing that she was very brave and would not try to get away.

For hours Willow Bud waited for the serpent to appear. Then an old brave from another tribe passed by, and when he saw that the serpent would not allow the rapids to drown Willow Bud, he rescued her from the water and carried her away to his own tribe.

Now these Indians thought that Willow Bud was holy, and they changed her name to Bride-of-the-Water. She was very, very happy, because she could always do exactly what she liked, and was given the best of all that the tribe possessed.

None of the springs or rivers belonging to those Indians ever dried, because Bride-of-the-Water was their queen!

WENDY'S LITTLE NEEDLEWOMEN

A Smart Crochet Wool "Set".

You can make a very attractive crochet wool "set" for your new frock if you choose wool in a shade that exactly matches or else provides a decided contrast. You will need about one ounce of four-ply wool for the set, which includes collar, cuffs, a waistbelt, and a pretty hand for your felt hat. You will also need a number eight bone crochet hook.

The collar is just a straight piece of treble crochet, about twelve inches long and four inches wide. Work a chain, four inches long, then do three extra chain, and work a treble crochet into the fourth chain from the hook. Continue in treble crochet all along the chain, work three extra at the end for turning, then come back along the row, and so on, till the strip is the required length. Take care to keep your stitches as even as possible. Diagram A shows you the strip; and Diagram B shows how you get the collar shape by turning over the ends each side. Find the middle of the collar and the centre-back of the dress; then sew on the collar, doing first one side starting from the centre-back, and then the other, so that you are sure to get it on straight.

Dressmaker tells you how to make this smart "crochet wool set" of collar, cuffs, waistbelt and hat-band.

The cuff-trimmings are made from long strips of treble crochet, each strip four trebles wide, and long enough to go round the cuff of your dress-sleeve, stitched in a flat bow, as you see in the picture.

Make a similar strip for the hat-band. The belt also is worked in treble crochet, about three inches wide and long enough to go comfortably round your waist.

You could make a pretty "jazz" set for a plain navy frock, by working odd lengths of different coloured wools together.

Wendy's Dressmaker.

She went to sleep. Then a little breeze sprang up, and, before poor Alvira knew where she was, her boat was dashed on a rock, and she only escaped by the skin of her teeth.

"Bad Luck!" she cried. "I don't want you—I want your brother."

The next day Miranda went out in a boat, and the same breeze sprang up. But she fought it hard, and would not go near the rocks, and suddenly it changed round and carried her to an island where the mermaids piled the gold they found at the bottom of the sea. And on the shore was a young man who looked as if he were made of

OUR SWEET-MAKING CORNER.

Chocolate Honey Balls.

Get a quarter of a pound of good chocolate powder, or grate

as finely as possible the same quantity of plain sweetened chocolate. Put this into a basin, and, using a wooden spoon, mix in sufficient honey to form a stiff paste. Shape the paste balls, and roll each in a little fine desiccated coconut. Place them in coloured paper cases, and put them on your party table.

This chocolate paste is nice for stuffing dates and prunes when the stones have been removed, and it can be used also as a filling for a sponge cake. When you use it in a sandwich cake, finish off the top of the cake by brushing it over lightly with a little white of egg and grating some chocolate on this.

CHAPTER VI.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR
Mata Hari, famous dancer and enemy spy, undertakes to get some secret papers from her lover Shubin, Attache of the Russian Embassy in Paris. Shubin has been unworried by a visit from Dubois, the head of the French Secret Service, and refuses to discuss them. But before leaving his house, Mata Hari meets again
a young aviator, Alexander Rosanoff, whom she has permitted to make love to her and dismissed, and learns he is flying to Russia in the morning.

THE DANGEROUS GAME.

There is always a sensation of surprised delight when the missing part of a puzzle, after much faging, slips suddenly into place.

This sensation Mata Hari felt when, as she deftly added one and one and one—the young aviator flying to Russia in the morning and ordered to keep to his rooms meanwhile—the papers no longer in Shubin's possession—Shubin's statement that the messages would be safe in Russia to-morrow—the unknown quantity leapt into her mind and made a total of four.

Why, of course, Rosanoff had the papers and was guarding them tonight!

And what was she to do? There was no question but that she must get the papers. Her pride would never permit her to report a failure to Adriana, especially one due to her own negligence, for this would not have happened yesterday. And here was a challenge to her skill.

Only—where did Rosanoff live?
She did not particularly regret her action of the afternoon and she had every confidence that she could undo it. If only she could find the young man in the haystack of Paris!
If only she had not taken it for granted that he was so unimportant!
Whatever had made her do that?

Down the wide, tree-shaded street,
a taxi chugged along rather slowly.
When it had reached a spot not far from her, the driver seemed to have some engine trouble. He got out and peered into the hood. He stamped his feet and rubbed his hands, but did not look around.
The dancer hugged the shadow of a wall. And after a second the taxi went on.

In a little while the taxi appeared around the corner again. And at about the spot where it had previously halted, it paused once more.
The driver appeared to have some fresh engine trouble.

Now, Mata Hari had made certain that this was no coincidence. But she signalled as she would have to an ordinary taxi and waited for the man to speak first.

"Madame, the weather is most inclement," he said.

She then got in.

"I am to tell you we have traced
the papers and to drive you there."
Really, Adriana was almost wondering to give her orders! He left nothing undone, he was ever on guard against the unlucky chance.

All the same, she examined the driver before replying. Fortunately,
she was able to recognise him under the disguise and at that she relaxed.

"Are you sure we're not being followed? Is there any one at the window, perhaps?"

"No Madame, there is no one in the street and I have seen nothing.
I am quite sure."

"They're at the young Russian's,
I suppose."

"Exactly, Madame. It's not far.
I am to tell you that the conclave is asleep, the men have keys and will let you in, and they will come later at your signal."

"But they can't take them away
—because in the morning ..."

"You finished your rendezvous
early," said Rosanoff with a bitterness that burst forth in spite of himself, a bitterness which the dancer caught at once and which
met her wishes.

"No! I ran away from it. Because I saw you ... I'm afraid
Shubin is in a temper about it."

"I can't make you out!"
"I can't either," she admitted.
"This morning," he went on, "you acted like—"

"—to-night I find you alone
with—"

"Alexis, you mustn't think ...
unpardonable thoughts. Shubin is rich and influential. He's an old friend of mine, and he is often very helpful. Surely, to dine with an old friend, to exchange a kiss and a clasp of the hands, for old times' sake—
is there any harm in that?"

It came into Rosanoff's mind that he had heard that so potent was
the enchantment in which she held
her lovers that ever after she had

"Oh, no, Madame. They will be returned before morning."
"And the signal?"
"When the lights go out."

All this time they had been travelling at the swiftest speed of a Paris taxi, which is no mean one, and the dancer was jerked from side to side. It was hard to make herself heard above the noise of the engine, but she was intensely curious to learn by what trick Adriana had managed to locate Rosanoff, and she repeated her query until the driver took notice.

"Madame, I drove him from your house to his this morning, and he has been followed ever since."

Of course, she knew that Adriana often had her watched by his operatives. She had realised that he was aware of her delinquency when he sent her the orchids. Still, it was official of him, though so fortunate in this instance. She made up her mind that it must come to a battle between them sooner or later when she would show him that she would insist on following her own course.

She was prepared for the two men who materialised like two ghosts from a patch of shadow.
One of them pointed to where a light burned in an apartment three flights up before they let her in.
There was no need for further conversation.

Climbing the stairs, for she de-tested these self-operated lifts that were just as likely as not to leave one stranded between floors, Mata Hari reflected with a superb assurance that the young man was about to get a most pleasurable surprise.
Her lids drooped more sensuously
over eyes grown a little brighter and a faint smile rose to her lips
from the wells of her secret thoughts. The ring that he had presented to her was still on her finger recalling the embraces of the previous night.

And when Rosanoff opened the door, wearing a Russian smock of heavy silk, the dancer decided that she found him even more handsome than in his uniform and quite as much to her liking.

"Well ... here I am," she announced easily ... and a moment later, "Aren't you going to let me in?"

The incredulous confusion on his face amused her. He gaped! Instinctively, he moved aside to let her enter.

Quite at her ease, she sauntered past him noticing the books, the pictures, the carved oak table, the portrait of the Czar draped with the Russian flag, casting her eyes at a stand against the wall, on which lay a black portfolio. The stand was of black wood and the case, flung there so casually, might have seemed of slight importance to an inexperienced person, else why was it exposed? It made Mata Hari recall a story she had read somewhere in which the police had searched a house from top to bottom, time after time, for a letter only to find that all the while it had reposed in plain sight on a rack.
She knew she had discovered what she wanted.

"What a charming little place you have! But then you must be often in Paris to keep your own quarters
here."

Rosanoff had regained his voice,
if not his poise, and he asked in a strangled tone, "Why did you come here?"

"Mmm ... to see you."

"You finished your rendezvous
early," said Rosanoff with a bitterness that burst forth in spite of
himself, a bitterness which the
dancer caught at once and which
met her wishes.

"No! I ran away from it. Because I saw you ... I'm afraid
Shubin is in a temper about it."

"I can't make you out!"
"I can't either," she admitted.
"This morning," he went on, "you
acted like—"

"—to-night I find you alone
with—"

"Alexis, you mustn't think ...
unpardonable thoughts. Shubin is rich and influential. He's an old friend of mine, and he is often very helpful. Surely, to dine with an old friend, to exchange a kiss and a
clasp of the hands, for old times' sake—
is there any harm in that?"

It came into Rosanoff's mind that he had heard that so potent was
the enchantment in which she held
her lovers that ever after she had deserted them, they remained her devoted friends. If that were true, how could he, whom she had sought out, resist her? In the tumult which her nearness engendered in his senses, he forgot to be puzzled as to how she had found him, he forgot the wound to his pride in the morning. She had only to touch his hand, look into his eyes and say caressingly, "Well, then, my dear?

I've said I'm sorry. Aren't you glad I'm here?" and he was lost.

As for the dancer, it gave her a sort of sensual gratification just to play with him, to let him embrace her, to draw away, to feel the strong pull of his senses toward her, to taste her victory.

Meanwhile, she had always in sight the fact that the men below were watching the windows. She could not see them, of course, but their suspense was ever-present. It was a strange thing, her mind—
one part of it voluptuously languid, almost drowsy, as she returned passion for Rosanoff's passion, for she drugged herself as well as her victims—and the other part lucid, matter-of-fact. The Englishmen who had noticed that she was business-like had really shown some knowledge of character.

At length, she disengaged herself and, Rosanoff following her about,
she looked over the room again to see if by chance she had missed any difficulties. But it was a quite simple room. There was a door to the bedroom, not draperies—a very good thing.

She noticed a photograph of an old man and in a niche close by a lamp burning before an ikon.

"Who is the old gentleman?"
"My father."

"I like his face. And this," she said just to be saying something,
"is a picture of the Madonna."

"The Madonna of Kazan," said
Rosanoff, pleased at her interest.
"My mother made a pilgrimage to the Cloister of Miracles to get it for me. It's more than a hundred miles from our town. She walked all the way."

"Indeed! What does it do?
Bring you luck?"

"It guards you from evil. I had to go down on my knees at the altar and promise I'd keep a perpetual flame burning before it."

"And have you?" she inquired.
"Oh, yes."

Something in the way he said it made the dancer look at him curiously.

"You're a funny boy."
"Who loves you!" declared
Rosanoff.

"Do you, indeed?"
"I love you as one adores sacred things," he said in a low voice.

"This was a game she played very prettily when she chose."

"What things?"
"God ... Country ... Honour ...
You—"

Always their silly honour! "I come last!" she inquired offended.

"No—no! You come first ... before anything."

"Before God?"
After a pathetic struggle, he brought out the word, "Yes."

Mata Hari regarded him with something that may have been pity.
He did seem so in earnest. To admit that she came before God was, she could see, sacrilege to him.
And yet the word, "yes," had been wrenched out of him. He was badly burnt!

With a smile that promised to reward him, she bade him in a soft voice to put out the lights. The blood rushed to his head. He obeyed till the room was in darkness
save for the glitter of the lamp before the ikon.

It may have been the glow on the gentle head of the image that annoyed her. It may have been that she thought even this faint light would be dangerous to her confederates or might be reflected on the window pane and confuse them as they waited below. Or it may have been a last caprice to test her power.

But as Rosanoff took her in his arms, she detached herself and pointed to the lamp.

MONDAY—In The Dark.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE FIRE.

A fire at Magdalen College, Oxford, was extinguished after damage had been done to valuable oak panelling.
It occurred in one of the rooms
which was occupied before his death by Sir Arthur Cowley, who was for many years Librarian of the Bodleian. A quantity of bedding was being aired, in preparation for next term, when it caught fire. A member of the college staff seized the burning material and threw it into the quadrangle. The panelling, which had taken fire in the meantime, was then extinguished.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT STOCKS STRONG.

All Round Rise.

Rugby, Yesterday.
There was another allround rise in British Government Stocks today, buying orders coming from both Home and Abroad. Advances are attributed to the expectations of a further reduction in the Bank Rate in the near future and are attracting special interest in view of the likelihood of early War Loan Conversion operation later.

War Loan five was quoted today at 100½. Conversion 4½ rose to 100½. Consols four to 90 and Funding Loan four, which closed on Thursday at 92½, improved to 94½.—British Wireless Service.

BRITISH SWEEPSTAKES.

Question To Be Raised In Parliament.

An extension of the powers of the Racecourse Betting Control Board—the body responsible for totalisator operation—to allow the Board to promote national sweepstakes for the benefit of English hospitals will, it is understood, be urged in the House of Commons.

In November the project was being seriously considered but it was then pointed out that, while no official steps had been taken, the suggestion was being freely discussed by the various interests concerned.

Apart from the funds which could be derived for hospitals by properly supervised national sweepstakes on the lines of the Irish sweepstakes, it is estimated that the charges which the Board would make would go far towards improving its unsatisfactory financial position.

When the report and accounts of the last year's operations of the Board are published in May it is expected that they will show another deficit. It is, in fact, regarded in sporting circles as doubtful whether the Board will be able to do more than make up the previous year's deficit and meet the interest charges on its bank loan of £2,000,000.

TOOK BRIDGROOM'S PLACE.

But Best Man Went For Police and Intruder Was Arrested.

Just as a rich peasant proprietor was being married to the village beauty, a young man who had long courted the girl dashed up the aisle, pushed the bridegroom down the steps of the choir, and took his place by the side of the frightened girl.

The priest pretended to go on with the ceremony. Meanwhile the best man slipped out of the church to fetch help.

When the intruder thought the wedding ceremony had been completed he carried the half-fainting bride in his arms to the door of the church.

But outside sixgendarmes were waiting for him, and freed the bride. She returned to the altar, and the priest then married her to the real bridegroom. The intruder was taken to prison.

LOCAL SOLICITORS IN HIGHLY DANGEROUS CAR SMASH.

Crash with Lamp
Standard in Queen's Road.

HEAD INJURIES.

Mr. H. S. V. Mossop, the well-known local solicitor, of the firm of Messrs. Johnson, Stokes and Master, was involved in a motor accident this morning, according to a Police report.

Mr. M. M. Watson, also a solicitor, and living at the Peninsula Hotel, was driving his motor car along Queen's Road East, in a westerly direction and when opposite the Army Ordnance Corps buildings, he attempted to pass another motor car, which was travelling in the same direction. In doing so, he collided with a lamp standard, in the middle of the road, damaging the rear part of the car.

The two passengers in the car, Mr. Mossop and Mr. N. J. Thayer, of the Hong Kong Club, sustained head injuries, as a result of the impact.

PATRIOTIC BRITISH TAXPAYERS.

Rugby, Yesterday.

In the House of Commons to-day Major Elliot (Financial Secretary to the Treasury) moving a small supplementary vote for extra expenses incurred in the collection of revenue said that the collection recently had been at a rate almost unparalleled in the history of this or any other country and it was due to the loyalty of direct taxpayers and officials of the department that this result had been obtained.—British Wireless Service.

U.S. TO ISSUE NO MORE NOTES.

Washington, Yesterday.

After a conference with Mr. Hoover, Mr. Stimson said to-day that there would be a cessation of notes on the Sino-Japanese situation.—Reuter's American Service.

£1,350 FOR A GIRL'S LEG.

Knocked Down By Bus While On Way To School.

Damages of £1,350 and costs were awarded at Nottingham Sheriff's Court recently to Dorothy Bennett, aged 12 of Union Street, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Nottinghamshire, against Messrs. Richard Johnson and Son, Sutton-in-Ashfield, omnibus proprietors.

The girl was returning from school last January when one of the company's omnibuses mounted the pavement and pushed her against the wall. Her left leg was consequently amputated above the knee. Another operation will be necessary, it was stated, before an artificial limb can be used, when she has finished growing in six years' time.

Youths Severely Dealt With.

Three Chinese youths, who attacked a Shantung police constable who had arrested a man in Hollywood Road, during the firing of crackers on Tuesday, were severely dealt with by Mr. Wynne-Jones yesterday afternoon.

His Worship considered that their conduct was highly dangerous, in that it might have led to considerable bloodshed and the loss of many lives. They were each fined $50, with the alternative of four weeks' imprisonment.

U.S. JOURNAL'S LOVE INDEX.

Private Lives Of Its Readers.

How much does a salesman need to know about his prospective customer? This question has cropped up during an investigation by the State Bureau of Statistics into the stock-selling activities of several high-class periodicals.

The bureau is seeking to determine if the publications are guilty of violating the Martin Act, which forbids the publication of intimately personal matter in a magazine. Six card indices were identified by Mr. Richard Somner, a former stock salesman for Town Topics, who said that he had received the cards before giving advice to the persons named on them. The names are withheld, but the annals themselves make curious reading.

"Clever Chauffeur."
One card read: "The wife of— She will divorce him in due time. Had practically agreed to marry — but seems to be taken up with a Mr. — who is worth $2,400,000."

Another card contained the information: "A bridge expert. Has an affair with the sister of his brother's wife, age 18. His wife has left him several times. Wealthy."

Yet another read: "Wife in distress, suing for non-support of a child. He is supporting other girls. Telephoned that he will take five shares."

WHEN DICKENS KEPT THE SCORE-BOOK.

Charles Dickens acted as cricket scorer at the village matches at Gadshill. On one occasion he bowled the first ball at a charity match at the back of Gadshill Place, and it is depicted in a picture which was to have been put up for sale at Sotheby's on February 17. The exact date is unknown, but it is believed to be September 16, 1868.

The novelist's son, Sir Henry Dickens, K.C., the Common Serjeant, has supplied some corroborative testimony. He says: "My father lived in Gadshill from 1866 to 1870. Towards the end of the time we had a village cricket club of which I was captain. My father used to take the part of scorer at the games we played there and was sustained in that arduous job by cooling drinks provided for those guests who were staying in the house at the time or for the neighbours who came to see the game."
